Learning A New Responsibility

Now that we've brainstormed some responsibilities, choose 1 responsibility you've never had and want to learn.

First, you'll figure out when a trusted adult can teach you, then you'll create a guide to remember how to do this task or to teach someone else how to do it.

Part 1: Planning Your Guide

Answer the questions below to plan how you'll learn your responsibility.

1. What responsibility did you choose? Make sure you can do it safely with or without an adult!

2. Who can teach you, and when are they available?

3. What tools will you need, and where can you get them?

4. How will you record the steps so you can remember them later? You can choose more than one.

- I will write each step in a notebook.
- I will take pictures of each step.
- I will record a video while I'm being taught.
- Other: _____

Part 2: Learning

When your chosen trusted adult is available, learn your new responsibility!

Be respectful and thankful as you learn, and remember to record the steps using the method you chose!

Part 4: Reflection

After completing your guide, answer the questions below to reflect on what it was like learning a new responsibility.

1. Did you find learning this new responsibility easy or hard? Why?

2. How did you feel before, during, and after learning this new responsibility?

3. What was the most challenging part of learning this new responsibility?

4. What did you enjoy most about learning this new responsibility?

5. How does this responsibility help your home and family? Will you continue to do this responsibility in the future?
